Eight deaths have been reported thus far to-day as a result of the hot wave. Two of them were infants who could not withstand the torrid temperature. Every hospital in the city is equipped to take care of the emergency heat cases that are certain to pour in on them during the day.

There can be no denying that summer has fairly wrapped its arms around the city, and the city, on its part, is doing all it can to counteract and escape the ardent attention. Residents are fleeing to seashore and mountain drives. In the past few days the business of transportation agencies has been unusually brisk. The railroad stations and ferry-boats are daily crowded with throngs eager to get themselves to the shade of the country or the sands of the beach. The scene at the Grand Central Depot to-day was suggestive of a general exodus. Thousands of men, women and children hurried through the gates and looked confusedly about them for the right train.

She Was a Genius. One woman, with a feather in her hat which curled over the front and kept poking her in the eye, went in and out of three gates before she finally staggered through the right one. She had a perfect genius for misunderstanding what was said to her. When the guard told her the train she should take was on track 8 she instantly made a bee-line for track 8. With her in these misguided flights she dragged a small boy, who clung tenaciously to a sticky and rapidly dissolving slab of crackerjack. The child was silently submissive until this mother, in her rollicking game of "crack-the-whip," finally slammed him up against a buffer. It was difficult to determine whether the boy or the crackerjack suffered the more. The moisture-soaked popcorn was mangled out of all semblance to its original form, and the boy struck the obstruction in such a manner as to rip all the buttons off his waist and skin his knee. For a moment he was calm—ominously calm. Then the storm broke. He let out a yell that echoed distantly in the farthest parts of the station, then sat down, obstinately and determinedly, on the none too clean platform. "All aboard!" yelled the crowing conductor.

Freddie Was a Kicker. "Come, Freddie, darling!" said the mother, blowing the feather out of her eye. "Freddie darling" answered by kicking his heel defiantly and wiping up some dirt with his once white trousers. "All aboard!" yelled the conductor a second time, looking straight at mamma and Freddie. "Wow!" screamed Freddie. Then mamma resorted to heroic measures. Taking firm hold of her squirming offspring she gave him a yank that landed him high and dry on the train steps.

Every outgoing boat is crowded to the rails and the short-trip excursion boats are taxed to their capacities. Considerate couples who take the trip to Coney Island in their motor cars, and who, as a sponge in the crowd, go jogging along apparently feeling the heat but little. Perspiring citizens, hats and handkerchiefs in hand, pick the shady side of the street; surface cars are jammed and saloons and soda-water fountains are doing a land-office business.

(Special to The Evening World.) BRIGHTON BEACH RACE TRACK, July 9.—The Sea Gate Stakes was the only feature at Brighton this afternoon. There were eight starters originally carded, but only four elected to go. Proper carried W. B. Jennings's colors, going to the post a warm choice. James R. Keene's Rigodon was the second choice. Both horses opened at 7 to 5 and the talent made a bad pick, for Rigodon beat out the favorite in a hard drive, Gannon's cleverness really won the race. He was outrun with Rigodon in the early part and Gannon took aim in behind the other three, who raced head and head. Going down the backstretch Gannon watched his opportunity and sneaked Rigodon through on the rail, saving a lot of ground. As Rigodon only won by a head the ground saved by his clever move won the race. Shotgun, the hottest favorite of the afternoon, was beaten by Counterpoise, a 15 to 1 chance, but as soon as Shotgun pulled up it was seen that he had broken down. Agnes Brennan won the opening event and Jim Kelly took the third.

POLICE HAVE BAY MYSTERY TO SOLVE

Coroner Told that Harlem Girl Fell from a Staten Island Boat and Was Lost, but Ferry Officials Make Denial.

The police and Coroner Schaefer, of Staten Island, have been asked to keep a watch for the body of Kate Koven, twenty-four years old, of No. 125 West One Hundred and Twelfth street, Manhattan, who is said to have fallen from a Staten Island ferryboat early to-day. A person who said he was a brother of the young woman called up the Coroner on the telephone this afternoon and said that he and the girl with some friends went to South Beach last night. They boarded the 125 A. M. boat to return home, and when it was between Robbins Reef Lighthouse and Liberty Island the girl, her brother said, fell overboard and although the ferryboat was stopped and a small boat lowered all efforts to find Miss Koven were in vain.

The ferry officials deny that anybody fell overboard from the boat. They say that the crew deny that the vessel was stopped and a small boat lowered, or that any alarm was given of a person having leaped into the water.

(Special to The Evening World.) "LEAGUE PARK, ST. LOUIS, July 9.—The third game of this historic series between the Giants and Cardinals was played here this afternoon before another brace-faced crowd and in a temperature of 95 degrees Fahrenheit. If it is as hot during the Exposition as this summer America's death-rate will be something awful.

St. Louis does not mind it much, being to the manner born, but even baseball rooters were a bit touched by the sun to-day, and mist jugs were passed from hand to hand, and a hard, crooked face that never before showed signs of health. Hardly any women appeared, for the costumes of the men savored too much of a Dahomey village. Coats and waistcoats have long since been abandoned. As for collars, they have not been imported as yet. Chief rooter Wilson wore one and the man at the gate asked if he bandaged his neck on account of boils.

Tobacco juice, however, was in vogue a-plenty, combining to give a fair picture of Hades on the grand stand. While the heat had in no measure lessened these gentle souls of their gift in vulgarity, vilification and desire to see some Giants killed, the appearance of Christie Mathewson warming up was a signal for general outburst, and upon "Matty's" shaven head fell a cluster of imprecations and curses that laid over Chuck Connors's choicest efforts. It was no place for children and women, though a few bore up well, occasionally joining in the pleasant badinage. A bad day for "Matty," who needs all his strength to work, and in ten minutes he stood knee deep in a pool of perspiration. Speed was nearly out of the question, as he counted on winning by continual show curves. Bowerman was more than satisfied at that, for his right forefinger was nipped on the end yesterday, and bruised so badly that it is now swollen three times its ordinary size. Frank's face, instead of recovering, seemed only this morning, still he continues to work like a Trojan, and there is certainly no gamier player in the business.

Patsy Donovan announced "Skeeter," Dunleavy for "Matty's" "Skeeter" lasting just long enough to lead the League in batting with the average of .45 per cent. He has also been very successful in slab performance. The Cardinals are mad to trounce McGraw's boys, preferring to beat them rather than anybody else. McGraw is just as anxious to get out of this place as a dog named by the Cardinal shortstop. Browne went to second as Van walked and made a beautiful steal of third as O'Neill threw in first. McGinn tried a sacrifice, but only bunted to Brown. The rooting was keen and vicious, everybody yelling themselves hoarse as Ryan got Mertes's clip and put Browne out at home. Van Halten attempted a silly steal from third and was caught out. No runs.

As Matty pitched he met a chorus of "swell head" and similar remarks, but it did not worry him. Farrell he allowed only a foul to Bowerman. Donovan managed a weak clip to McGinn. Smoot a baby home was put for Van Halten. No runs.

HOPE GONE BUT POPE MAY LIVE THROUGH NIGHT

After Consultation, in Which Prof. Rossoni, New Physician Called in, Participated, Dr. Lapponi Declared that the Pontiff's Disease Was Developing --- Necessity Now For Another Operation.

MIND IS PERFECTLY CLEAR AND HE IS DRESSED AND SITTING UP

This Afternoon the Change for the Worse Came, Filling His Attendants With Alarm —He Had Made the Prediction That His Life Would End Sometime During the Day.

LATEST BULLETIN—ROME, JULY 9, 7.30 P. M.

"The general condition of the illustrious patient having become depressed, a consultation was held at 4 o'clock, with the participation of Prof. Rossoni. From objective examination it appears that the liquid is again rapidly gathering in the pleura. The sounds of the heart are weak, without any symptoms of valvular lesion. The pulse is easily compressible, and it has 90 pulsations instead of 65, which is normal. The breathing is superficial and at long intervals. The kidneys are not performing their regular functions. The state of His Holiness is considered grave."

"ROSSONI, 'LAPPONI, 'MAZZONI."

ROME, July 9.—7.30 P. M.—After the consultation into which Prof. Rossoni was called Dr. Lapponi came from the sick chamber long enough to say a few words. The doctor looked haggard and much depressed. The hopeful appearance which he had shown early in the day had entirely disappeared. He said:

"I fear there is no hope, no hope whatever. And yet the end may not come to-night. Although the patient's condition is very grave, the disease seems to be developing through slow but certain processes."

Dr. Rossoni and Dr. Mazzoni left the Vatican after the consultation, but later Dr. Mazzoni returned.

It is expected that another official bulletin will be issued about 9 o'clock to-night.

One of the most remarkable features in the serious turn which affairs have taken is that the Pope continues dressed and partly sitting up. His mind is perfectly clear, and apparently the only cause for alarm is that the doctors have detected a renewal of the dangerous internal complications.

The news of the sudden relapse of the Pope, the consultation of physicians and the alarming bulletin which followed were as an unexpected thunderbolt in what had already become in the public feeling an unclouded sky. The idea now prevails that this brings to a definite end all of the bright hopes which were cherished this morning. Professor Rossoni went through the most careful examination of the illustrious patient, employing again what is known as the Baccelli system. The consultation lasted over two hours. The patient, as one feature of the investigation, was made to pronounce the Italian word "thirty-three" (trenta-tre), which in a case where there is indicated the presence of a badly acting heart, a vitiated circulation, and serum in the pleura, to any one listening at the patient's side presents a sound as if the consonants in the word had been dropped.

The experiment unfortunately proved not only the presence of fluid in the pleura, but its rapid augmentation, so that it already afflicted the patient with the same disturbances that were observed on last Tuesday.

It was evident that another operation would be indispensable, but no decision on this point will be reached until after another consultation, which has been postponed until to-night because of the weakness of the patient. The three doctors will make another examination within an hour or two.

A state of great prostration has ensued, rendering worse the affection of the kidneys. It is likely that an injection of salt water into the veins will be resorted to. The diarrhoea which appeared this afternoon and occasioned the consultation has now ceased.

The most disquieting change that has taken place in the condition of Pope Leo XIII. occurred this afternoon. He was suddenly attacked with diarrhoea and became greatly weakened. Other distressing features, notably the recurrence of cyanosis in the fingers, indicating poor circulation and weak blood, became visible, and there was much anxiety expressed by those in attendance. After a long conference in the night it was decided that in case the Pope grew worse there should be a consultation at which at least one new doctor should be present. Both Dr. Mazzoni and Dr. Lapponi decided that under such conditions a physician whom they would prefer was Prof. Rossoni, a pupil of Dr. Baccelli and his successor in the General Clinic at Rome.

Dr. Rossoni was called into the sick room in consequence of the sudden change for the worse in the condition of the Pope.
